

The meaning of life and death!

Why it cannot be told and must be discovered!

By Simon.

Written 10th December 2013

I have had a number of anomalies in my life. After 43 years I have been shown that these were "keys", triggers to lead to me to where I am now.

For example of one of these keys; if you put a picture of my mum's dad beside a picture of me when we were both in our twenties you couldn't tell us apart. We were identical in every way (hair, hair styling, eyes, ears, everything!). The key is in the fact I'm adopted and I should have no connection to this family whatsoever.

When I first saw this photo it triggered something deep inside me. I didn't know what it meant but every atom in my body knew it was really, really important. This key came after a number of others but this was the one that set the path I would take from then on.

Once you are aware of the keys existing the path you originally chose will start to open before you. Free-will is still very relevant to your life but you will find that it will work in unison with the path you set as you entered this life.

Note:

My Mum's dad committed suicide and this current life of mine had a 15 year battle with depression in which it almost won twice. I believe I failed the lesson in my last life and came back almost immediately to do it all over again. This situation would have kept repeating life after life until I had learnt the lesson.

There are many people who believe that they have found the answers to life but invariably they are following a course that is wrapped in controls and fear. The real answer strips away all ego, all Worldly desires and strips away every fear and control life had over you.

The answers were and are incredibly simple but humanity wraps the truth in fear and then smothers that fear with controls so we are left with people divided across the globe. Everyone is divided and yet at the core these fears and controls hide the same answer once you strip the mechanisms away.

A comical author named Douglas Adams wrote a book titled "The hitchhikers guide to the Galaxy".

In the book it gave the answer to the ultimate question of life, the universe and everything as "42". It was calculated by an enormous supercomputer over a period of 7.5 million years. Unfortunately the computer points out that the answer seems meaningless because the beings who instructed the computer to find the answer never actually knew what the questions were to arrive at that answer.

This scenario, written in humorous context, is actually highly accurate because the answers to the biggest questions won't be understood unless the process and path to get to that answer is as equally understood. If I gave you my answer to the life, the universe and everything it might well as be the number 42 because you need ALL the right questions leading to the answer AND you need to understand them all to understand the answer.

Understanding this is still only part of the answer because you can "read" and learn what happens after you die but you still have to read words written by man which is always subject to the fears and controls I mentioned above.

I understand that saying I have found the answers to the biggest questions is a very bold claim to make but when you find the answer you'll realise how unbelievably simple and obvious it was.

As I ventured further and further into the murky areas of research that few visit I became labelled by those who don't want to know the answers. The fact is I had to go down a few rabbit holes to spot the patterns of truth. I have been incorrectly labelled as a conspiracy theorist when I have no interest in any of them. I don't care who shot JFK, whether man landed on the moon or not or if aliens have been visiting planet Earth for thousands of years. What I WAS interested in was ancient history and the correlations between beliefs and the commonalities between ancient texts.

Reading and then spotting the same patterns still isn't enough because there is always doubt that this could be another wrong path. What if I told you that there are ways to "see" what happens next? Would it surprise you that you can?

There is a chemical we all produce in our bodies each and every day. Animals and plants also produce it every day. It is found all through "life".

In the 1980's the American Government experimented with thirty or so terminally ill cancer patients and gave them this chemical. They gave them the amount we produce at death. Every single one of those patients no longer feared death once they had taken it. What you see is far outside of all imagination. It is not possible to describe most of what you see because there are no words to describe it in our language. This is how I know that what I saw was real. Is it not strange that Governments have made it illegal to take a chemical we all produce every night? A Judge sentencing you for taking it would have committed the very same offense just the night before. It is illegal only because it proves to you the truth that is hidden in plain sight.

Twice in our lives we produce huge quantities of this chemical; as we take our first breathe and as we take our last breathe. By taking the amount produced at death you see exactly what happens next. You die and you're fully conscious of the entire process. The Chemical is called DMT and I've spoken about what I witnessed in another document.

The answer to the easiest question: "What happens when we die?"

This is the simplest and easiest to answer because the answer can be found in almost all religions, ancient texts and ancient beliefs. You simply have to strip away the controls and fear to see the answer in all its simplistic glory.

The Egyptians had the ankh to offer the first breathe in the afterlife, Catholics and Christians believe in heaven and hell, Buddhists believe in karma and streams of consciousness. Everywhere you turn you find the same truth that an afterlife does indeed exist but it is wrapped in controls and/or fear. So the next question is "Why?"

The "why" it is wrapped in control and fear is easy to answer. Put aside all your beliefs for a few minutes and ask yourself this one, simple question...

"If you knew you were eternal, that this is just one life in an endless stream of new experiences and lives, that no matter how bad things got you knew it didn't matter in the slightest because this is just one of infinite experiences... just how much control would Governments, corporations and churches etc have over you?"

The answer, if you ever really think about it is "none". There could be no control over any of us if nothing in this life mattered when compared the previous thousand lives or the future infinite lives". What we THINK is important (our looks, our daily lives, possessions, the future) actually amounts to nothing but experiences. We learn experiences in each life, everything else, all emotions and attachments are irrelevant. You might think the iPad 4 you have now is cool; waiting until you see the iPad 50 in your next life! Do you see what I mean? Possessions are irrelevant, jobs are irrelevant, money is irrelevant, any disease you might have is irrelevant EXCEPT for one thing; the experience you learn from having it or not having it.

It doesn't matter if you live in a castle or on the streets, it doesn't matter if you work 140 hours a week or zero hours a week. The ONLY thing that matters is what you take and learn from each experience.

You might be experiencing a really dreadful life or you've had set-back after set-back so as you read the following few paragraphs as I explain why you've suffered this let's see if this resonates with you...

Why does my life suck?

The simple answer is "You chose it", now bare with me while I explain why. Please put aside all current beliefs and just mull this around in your mind for a while...

Let's say you're an infinite being who's never been anything other than an energy being. A long, long time ago you decided you want to experience something new; like being born into life as a solid being; in this case a human. You are born into a solid body for the first time and you spend 70 years or so doing everything you love doing, experiencing absolutely everything you wanted to experience. At the end of those 70 years you proclaim "WOW that was great but now let's add a little bit of mystery to the next one to make it more interesting". So for the next life you spend 70 years or so doing a lot of what you love doing but with a twist or two along the way. As that life passes you say "WOW, that was a close call a couple of times but still huge fun so let's see how far I can push the next one and add even more mystery and emotion to it" ... eventually, over many lives, you create the life you're living now.

If, as I'm saying, the secret of life is to learn and experience what life entails, then going from life to life to life doing the same thing over and over again won't actually allow you to experience all that there is to experience. A hard life doesn't mean you were a bad person, it's just an experience you wanted to have this time around.

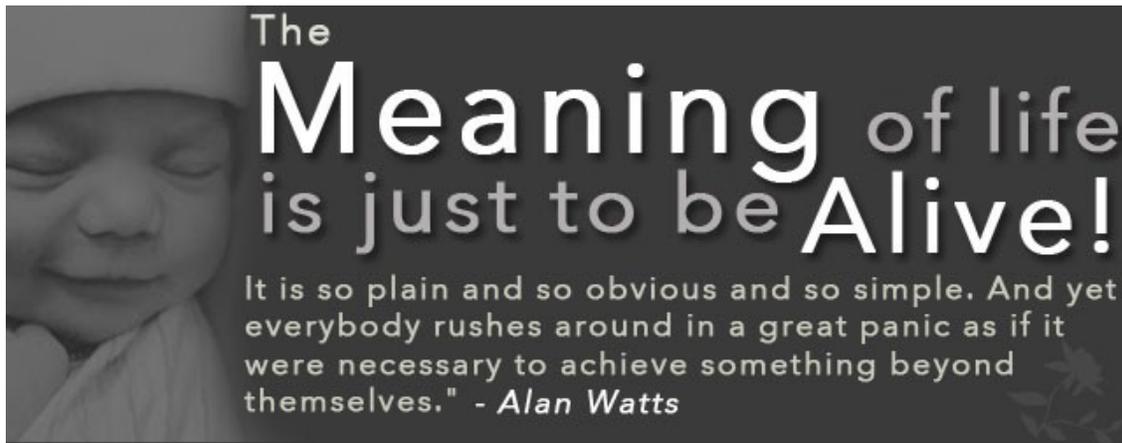

It's our conditioning that makes the life seem good or bad. Rich or poor, fit or ill, polar explorer or office worker... these are all just experiences, nothing more, nothing less. There are many accounts of very old souls who are choosing harder and more complex lives to experience more and more aspects of life. If your life sucks then I say to you congratulations! you are probably an old soul and I have the deepest respect for you undertaking such a life this time around.

Why is my life repeatedly doing the same thing to me?

I was also one of these groups of people. My life would endlessly repeat the same problems over and over again. Then one day I did something that I had never thought about before. An idea popped into my head "What could I LEARN from this repeating experience?". I thought about what I could learn and almost immediately the answer popped into my head. That was the very last time that situation repeated. I then looked at other areas of my life which were also repeating and did the same thing. Now nothing ever repeats. As a new experience comes along (both good and bad) I always look at what I can learn from it and then that experience never repeats again because it doesn't have to, I understood what I needed to learn from it.

The Meaning of Life...

This is another one wrapped in complexity but is just as simple to understand...

Many people around the World spend their life working in a job they don't like, to pay for things they don't need in order to survive in a World that passes them by. It is far better to have a short life doing the things you love doing rather than a long life doing the things you don't like doing.

Once you realise that this life is just one in a long line of lives or experiences then everything that once seemed important now has no hold over you.

The battle within

One of the main problems we face is ourselves. We have a built-in mechanism which not only tries to give us our identity but controls how we see others and the World. This internal mechanism is commonly referred to as "The Ego". Having an ego isn't a bad thing at all. People try to rid themselves of it but often fail. They fail because it isn't so much that you have to always try to block it; you simply need to observe it in action and be aware that before you start to speak or act it may be the ego driving the situation.

Over time you will find that your ego will stop trying. My ego is still around but it sits in the corner of my mind and no longer has control of my mind. If you know me ask anyone that knows me if I have changed over the last few years? I bet most will say I am remarkably different but in a positive way.

If I'm wrong it doesn't matter

I have no job, sick relatives I care for, debt piling up, mortgage I can't pay and yet... I live a life with zero stress, no worries, fears, anxiety nor doubts. I ride the waves of life but I don't submerge myself in them.

My mind is an empty cup waiting for new knowledge but never accepting anything as fact. This sounds like it should contradict everything I've just written but it doesn't. I strongly believe, given everything I've seen, read and experienced that this is all very likely true but once I set anything in stone I limit all possibilities. I allow my mind to journey into any area I find interesting and I retain what I like but never make that new knowledge a certainty. Even my Bucegi research sits in a folder in my brain titled "most interesting”.

To find the answers you MUST let go of ALL your beliefs and run with everything and anything. Pretty much all you find will have fear and controls attached to it. You must be able to look at it from the outside and be objective.

Much of the history you've been told is a lie. Much of the religious texts (including the bible, koran etc) are not quite what they seem. A lot of what you are taught is an inversion of the truth or just a fraction of the truth.

Many of the biggest questions will have the simplest of answers. You just need to look at it with a fresh pair of eyes, like a child who hasn't yet been filled with distortions and distractions.

One final point:

Be VERY, VERY careful to not attach labels or put ideas into boxes if you venture down this road. It is very easy to take a single point of reference and then wrap it into one single stereotypical belief. I have found answers in many beliefs but if I had taken one piece from one belief and then said “only this belief is correct!” I would never have found the answers I was seeking.