

Raising vibration – A Penguin analogy

Simon Day, 19th Feb 2013

Think of our current vibrational state as being like a penguin. A penguin is stuck on land and sea because they cannot fly with their wings. In this analogy the land and sea is our current dimension and the sky is the next, progressive dimension. Without proper wings we are unable to fly.

We think we are ready for progression but thinking we are is different from actually being ready. Thinking we are only results in this...

Just as penguins are firmly attached to land and sea we have also become attached to our existence. Penguins can swim in the sea, move around on ground but they cannot soar into the sky because they believe the land and sea is all there is and is all that they need. We equally cannot progress because we believe this is all that there is.

We need to change and stop believing this matter based existence is all there is.

Fear, hate, anger, envy etc are the tools to keep us from being able to fly, to keep us firmly on the ground. In order for a penguin to be able to fly there needs to be a leap in their evolutionary state. They have to want to be able to fly and realise in the air is where they belong in order for evolution to come up with the solution. You are your own self-evolution.

Likewise we are stuck here because we believe that a matter based life is where we should be. Those who think they are ready to fly are only pretending to themselves. Understanding is a first step but being told what is true is not the same as DISCOVERING what is true.

All accepted versions of truth only offer glimpses but none offer the complete solution. People who are religious (as an example) believe they will be with God but they have no proof which God is the right one or what those Gods actually were. Yet each religion claims it is the only salvation. Instead of looking for the wings throughout their life they instead strap the jetpack of religion on and think that's the job done...

A jet-pack isn't the same as finding the wings, you can't cheat it.

In order to move on from this matter based existence we have to realise that we are not self-grounded like a penguin. We think we are dependant on matter when the truth is we can fly if we understand what it means. This can only be self-discovered, not taught.

Everything we are told is that, like the penguin, we should be grounded. By self-removing the grounding mechanisms we realise that we can actually fly...

